But for the preent circumstances of the dynasty and the necessity of conciliating oreign nations, the question would doubtless have remained some time longer unsettled. In fact, the Japanese would have been the first to penetrate to the Dragon Throne. No foreign Power was willing to make war for the sake of having its Ministers properly supected and treated here by the 'Son of Heaven.' Commercial coneiderations and concessions entered too much into the discussion of the question. THE REASON OF THE SUBRENDER.

It is useless to discuss or speculate on how this point his been reached. Three things may, hower, be noted. First and oremost note the unimpeded advance of the Japanese and the supposed imminent march on Peking. Second, the dread the Chinese have of two of the Powers in the event of an attack on Paking and the overthrow or weakening of the dypasty. Third, the necessity of conciliating the great Western Powers, and by granting this important but inevitable concession, to secure their mediatorial influences in suspending or averting the breaten d descent on the capital and in the bringing about of peace. These are the points that have tended towards the solution of this long disputed question. Mr O'Conor has made the Tsungli Yame's distinctly understand that unless complete repration is promptly made for that senseless and grapresentatives within the Palace proper on thitous outrage on a neutral and friendly flag, it will be exected by the British fleet. The reparation demanded includes a larger monetary indemnity than we sat first required; the salute of the Chungking by 21 guns from the Taku forts at her next appearance, and the prompt dismissal and degradation of Sheng Taotai. Wo are aware that this sudden, and seemingly impulsive, return of Great Britain to a firm and resolute policy will make great domands on the credulity of our readers, as we must conless it has our own: but many collateral noints of evidence tend to show that sooner or later England, while main mining an attitude of friendship towards China, would have to assume a bearing of benevolent hostility to Chinese officials. Weare aware this is highly anomalous, but many things English are. We have throughout this war deliberately been pro-Chinese, for the adequate reason that we deemed China to be in the right; but we have not shut our eyes to the aggravating conditions that have so constantly tended to warp our sympathies and to make us hope that in the inevitable success of Japan right might come out of wrong. The appalling corruption and stupidity in all departments of civil and military office, the flagrant rascality so apparent in Ch hli, which is yet-probably the best administered province in the empire. the murder of Mr Wylie, and the senseless and gratuitous outrage on the Chungking, have filled the friends of China, foreign and native alike, with despair, and have aroused the doubt whether after all Japanese success, even if it involved dynastic and social revolution, might not be better than the slow oanker which is sarely consuming the vital strength of the empire. . We are not about to rat: between China and Japan we still deem the former to be in the right in this quarrel and the latter altogether in the wrong; but we are Euglishmen first and Chinophiles second, and have not one moment's hesitation in entirely submerging the lesser sentiment in the greater. CAMP SONG I. Oh! we're told with lots of circumstance and chine Of the value and the value of the 'Line,'

But the Battery is so far left unsung.

So now I am agoing to give it tongue. To the Butcher whose ides of fighting's fun. But when 'kid glove' slinghter's called for Then the Gunners aure are bawled for

To do their bit of footling round the Gun. Oh its Tommy, Tommy Atkins, You may think you're very grand When you're jabbing round with bayonets And fighting hand to hand, But oh ! Tommy-you're a messer

When compared with Gunners who, At solentific sloshing. Knock the stuffin out o' you.

Oh! we marches to the work-detachment

And trots around 'is little baby cart: When she's ready No. 4 just does the trick-nothing more. But it'll knock a vessel's crew a trifle sick. Oh! its Tommy, Tommy Atkins, You may think you're very grand When you're jabbing mand with bavonets | eager buyers ...

And fighting hand to hand. But Oh! Tommy you're a messer When compared with Gunners who. At scientific alcohing. Knock the stuffin out of you. CAMP SONG II.

A Fragment. Oh! when the row shall start in Singapore You will wish you was a member of the Corps, And could go andhave your fun, Round a comfortible gun, Instead of marching till your feet get sore, Rahnd the Town' Up and down. Keeping civil order for the Crown, While those they don't require Oan come and jadi tukang ayer And bring us ager bates From the Town.

And this forecast of the Major's postprandial address will beappreciated by some who know his brand of oratory !-Now then, Right-half, shun. This evening after dinner the Major will be obliged to rise for the purpose of putting you chaps in the way you should go, and we want you to take special note of what he says, so that in course of time the necessity for a few words, may die out. He will have his main gauche in the trouser pocket of that side, and his right will nervously finger a memo of Corps Orders, on the back of which he has the heads of the remarks he will make. His chin will, when he starte, rest gently on top of his shirt front his gaze will be mostly the table cloth. As he warms up, however, he will lift his head, and eyes together and lean forward with his hands on the table.
